IS THIS TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE?

Lana Turvey-Collins does not shrink from the challenge of leading a high-stakes national conversation about the future of the Catholic Church in Australia. As the facilitator of the Church’s historic Plenary Council 2020, she is leading a three-year “transformative journey” with the cultural reform of the Church on the table. “I am not naïve to the significant changes many want,” she said, referring to a Church faced with dwindling numbers, a shortage of priests and rocked by revelations of the Royal Commission into child sexual abuse. A Queenslander, with strong academic credentials and with her own life-changing experiences in Africa, Mrs Turvey-Collins acknowledges the robust public debate the plenary will generate, and its ground-breaking potential. “Women’s role in leadership in the Church is something personally relevant. There is already so much great leadership going on with women every day in all sorts of places – lay women, religious women, Catholic teachers, nurses, doctors, scientists and theologians. “I think the listening and dialogue encounter means we can engage the voice in a way we maybe haven’t experienced before.”

The last plenary council, held in 1937, was an exclusively male gathering, with only bishops, theologians and superiors of male religious orders attending. The 2020 version has a different complexion with all-of-church participation from a richly diverse community, and the intent to discuss and legislate on a wide range of issues, including matters of faith, morals and discipline. The starting point for Plenary 2020 will be an official launch on Pentecost Sunday with an invitation to Catholics and Catholic organisations to provide their views, through a range of meetings and online kits – downloadable from a plenary council website that goes live in May. This “listening and dialogue” stage will take a year, and Mrs Turvey-Collins expects “tens of thousands of responses”, but if there is to be one overarching question, she believes it is: “What do you think God is asking of us in Australia? Anybody can answer that: whether you’ve got a theology degree, whether you’re a five or a seventy-year-old, you can engage in that question. It is important we try to enable as many parts of the Catholic Church, all of that diversity of health, social services, education, parish-based, curia, agencies, media, as well as those who somehow aren’t in any of those places, who in a survey can’t even decide whether they tick Catholic or not.”

In 2012, Mrs Turvey-Collins took a year-long sabbatical in Zambia, working for the country’s Catholic bishops as a project officer and international liaison. “It was the first place I had ever experienced being in the minority, the vulnerability and open-heartedness of being human, that poverty creates inter-dependence and a real need of having other people in your life. And that space – the Catholic parish – was no longer a place you go to for one hour on a Sunday, it was a deep, integrated part of how people considered their lives. Their faith meant they could see beyond where their current reality was.” Mrs Turvey-Collins said her Zambian experience helped her to see the “way of being Church” was “loving one another so deeply you help each other to survive. This is the Church Jesus talked about as Kingdom.” Her colleagues Peter Gates and Father Noel Connolly also became part of a facilitation team that held its first meeting with the bishops’ commission and an executive committee for Plenary Council 2020, late last year.

“My job as facilitator is to create spaces where all those people with all of those different perspectives can engage with one another, and that we genuinely listen to God by listening to one another, and that we discover what the Spirit is trying to say to us,” she said. After the first plenary stage of listening and dialogue, contributions will be collated by the plenary council organisers and used to develop some discussion documents for the plenary council. The plenary council will then be held in two sessions, the first in October 2020 in central Australia, and a second in May 2021, most likely in Sydney. From the Catholic Leader, 3 April, by Mark Bowling
