ARCHBISHOP COSTELLOE’S LENTEN MESSAGE (Part Two)

In our Catholic tradition we are very familiar with the idea of an ‘examination of conscience’. We know that this is an essential part of our preparation to receive the Sacrament of Reconciliation. For many of us it is also an integral part of our daily prayer life; in our evening prayers we look back over the day to recognise where we have failed and ask for God’s forgiveness. In both instances it is possible, of course, to fool ourselves, turning a blind eye to the “plank in our own eye” while being very quick to point out “the splinter in another’s eye” (cf. Matt 7:3).

In examining our consciences, individually and as communities of faith, there is always a risk that we do so only in a superficial manner. We list off the things we did which we should not have done. We might also, more challengingly, reflect on the things we did not do which we should have done. This Lent perhaps we can go even further and deeper: perhaps we can consider what lies in our hearts for, as Jesus says, “from within, out of the heart of a person, come evil thoughts, fornication, theft, murder, adultery, coveting, wickedness, deceit, licentiousness, envy, slander, pride, foolishness. All these evil things come from within, and they define a person” (Matt 7:2-23)

How do we read our hearts? How do we read ourselves? Perhaps by reflecting on where most of our time, and energy, and material and personal resources go. The individual sins we commit, including those involving our failure to act when we could and should have done something, point to our wounded and selfish hearts, for all evil things come from within, and they defile us. TRUTH, JUSTICE AND HEALING COUNCIL MEDIA RELEASE

Subiaco parishioner Neville Owen, chair of the Truth Justice and Healing Council, is one of eight new members appointed to Pope Francis’s renewed clergy sexual abuse commission. The 17-member Pontifical Commission for the Protection of Minors, headed by Boston Cardinal Sean O’Malley, is the Pope’s peak advisory body on clerical sexual abuse and child protection issues. Mr Owen is a former senior judge of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Western Australia. Francis Sullivan, chief executive of the Truth Justice and Healing Council, said the appointment of Mr Owen to the commission was significant and insightful. “There are few people, anywhere in the world, who have both a deep understanding of the Catholic Church and of the clerical child sexual abuse crisis which has had such an impact on it over the past decades.” Members come from several different countries, “reflecting the global reach of the Church and the challenge of creating safeguarding structures in diverse cultural contexts,” the commission said. The statement said it was understood some of the members are abuse survivors but had not publicly identified themselves. The commission said it “believes that their privacy in this matter is to be respected.” The next meeting of the Pontifical Commission, in April, will begin with a meeting with some survivors of sexual abuse.
